

School of Criminal Justice

Rutgers School of Criminal Justice (SCJ) is a major national and international center for scholarly research on all aspects of policing, delinquency, crime, and criminal justice administration. This provides a basis for its educational programs that also fulfill public service obligations by helping to address the needs of criminal justice agencies within the city, state, nation, and world.

The SCJ faculty includes some of the top scholars in the field, and U.S. News & World Report has ranked the Ph.D. program in Criminology seventh in the nation. The doctoral program continues to set the standard for doctoral training, and SCJ's graduating students are highly sought after by universities recruiting new faculty. Among the distinguished faculty of SCJ are Ko-lin Chin, Ronald Clarke, James Finkenauer, George Kelling and Leslie W. Kennedy.

All of the degree programs offered by Rutgers School of Criminal Justice provide classroom as well as research opportunities that prepare students for positions in research, teaching, and criminal justice system management and policymaking.

Rod K. Brunson, dean

Degrees awarded:

Bachelor of Science

B.S./M.A.

Master of Arts

Ph.D. (offered jointly with the Graduate School-Newark)

RUTGERS
UNIVERSITY | NEWARK

Center for Law and Justice, 123 Washington St., Newark, NJ 07102 | 973.353.3311

web site: rscj.newark.rutgers.edu | application: admission.rutgers.edu/0201.asp | catalog: catalogs.rutgers.edu/scj_current graduate application: gradstudy.rutgers.edu